Dr. Thomas Delivers Farewell Address

"God's War", Says President Thomas To Class of 1918 in Mead Chapel

In the Baccalaureate Sermon which President Thomas delivered at the Mead Memorial Chapel to the graduating class on Sunday morning, May 5, the general subject of his discourse concerned the relation between the war and the need of religious faith. He said in part:

"For Christian America today there is no text of scripture more appropriate, more suggestive of our immediate duty, than this verse of the 144th Psalm

'Blessed be the Lord my Rock,
Who teacheth my hands to war,
And my fingers to fight.'

I believe we have a present right to that sentiment and I wish to explain why I believe it.

"When the cataclysm of August, 1914, burst upon the world it was looked upon by many as irrefragable proof of the failure of the Christian religion. There were many who asked, uncertainly but fearfully, Is not Christianity a failure, if after twenty centuries of preaching and praying this holocanst of the civilized world could not be prevented?

"We are not talking of the failure of religion now. It is not that logical argument has been found to allay our doubts, but that events have brought to us a mood in which question as to the reality of faith seems no longer pertinent. Our brothers have exemplified faith, proved it in sublime deeds on a thousand bloody fields and in countless nameless acts of heroism on the dark waters of the winter seas. While learned men in reviews and magazines were still discussing the eclipse of faith, common soldiers in the trenches and simple folk fleeing from their flaming homes

SECOND WAR-TIME COMMENCEMENT SUCCESS FROM START TO FINISH

Number of Alumni and Notable Guests Attend Exercises Seniors Present Service Flag To College

Battalion Reviewed By Governor Graham and Colonel Johnson This Morning—Junior Prom Closes Program Tonight.

In spite of the early date, the One Hundred and Eighteenth Annual Commencement of Middlebury College proved no less successful than in past years. Friday afternoon the events of senior week opened with a baseball game between the two companies of the College Battalion.

Contrary to the usual perverse conditions, Saturday brought splendid weather for the Class Day Exercises and the track meet between the Reserve Signal Corps from Burlington and Middlebury. The Alumni luncheon which a number of the class of '18 and the alumni attended was given at 12:30 o'clock in Pearsons. In the evening a Musicale under the direction of Prof. L. J. Hathaway, was held in the Mead Chapel.

The Baccalaureate Sermon, delivered Sunday morning by President Thomas, was well-attended. In the afternoon the Anniversary of the Christian Associations at which Rev. George L. Cady of New York City spoke, was held at the Congregational Church. A number of the fraternities held reunions in the evening.

This morning the College Battalion was reviewed by Governor Graham and Colonel Johnson. At eleven o'clock the Graduation Exercises at which Dr. Huget of New York delivered the address took place at the Congregational Church.

The usual college customs such as the "step singing" were carried out at various times during the week.

There was no lack of spirit throughout the entire program in spite of the war conditions. A large number of alumni and guests were present to attend the exercises, among whom the most notable were Governor Graham and the Hon. Abram I. Elkus, the present ambassador to Turkey.

COMPANY B 9, COMPANY A 8

The Commencement program was opened by a closely contested baseball game between the two companies of the Middlebury Battalion, Co. B came out victorious by a 9 to 8 score. Crippen started on the mound for Co. A but retired in the third inning after 7 runs had been chalked up against his delivery. He was relieved by Myrick who pitched effectively securing ten strikeouts. Co. A could not do much with Elmer's benders, although they staged a rally in the final frame when they scored three runs and had the tieing run on the third sack when Franklyn fanned on three pitched balls.

In the first inning Bower walked, Mead singled through the box, and El-

STIRRING ADDRESS BY REV. J. P. HUGET

"What Would Lincoln Say To This Generation?"

Oration Delivered This Morning Before Large Audience At Commencement

Rev. James Percival Huget delivered the address at the annual Commencement exercises of Middlebury College, in the Congregational Church this Morning. His subject was, "What Would Lincoln Say to This Generation?" Dr. Huget said in part:

In the year 1809 there entered the life of this world a group of men who were destined to write their names in fadeless letters upon the pages of the history of humanity. In 1845 one of them, Alfred Tennyson, published his "In Memoriam". Although Tennyson in all probability had not at this time even heard the name of the yet unknown Springfield lawyer, there are lines in the poem which J. A. MacDonald, of the Toronto Globe, applies to Lincoln, saying, "his name alone seems to answer as the great original". I have also been told that James A. Garfield made the same application in his memorial address in Congress.

Lincoln was the man of the hour. He was also the man of the century. Stanton said at his death bed, "Now he belongs to the ages!"

Never has theree been greater need than today, in America and throughout the world, for the ideal and the spirit of the Great Commoner. It is no idle question, then: "What would Lincoln say to this generation?" It is a question the very asking of which is significant, and the answer to which—if answer can truly be made—will furnish light and guidance greatly needed in a perplexed and troubled time.

Certainly Lincoln is entitled to a hearing—none more so at such a time. His words will have weight and value,

We Must Not Fail

As we leave Middlebury for the long summer recess the thought of the Endowment Fund rises in our minds. It will not come amiss to review briefly the history of this big drive, which if it succeeds as it surely must, will go down in the College records in huge red letters.

The first intimation of any special effort to raise money for Midd came last June, during Commencement week, when the offer of $100,000, as soon as the College had raised $200,000, was made. The effect of that offer resembled the effect produced when a stone is dropped into a quiet pool. The ripples of endeavor have spread in an ever widening surface until they have reached Midd's alumni and friends far and wide. Efficient committees have been organized in all the larger cities and the Thousand Dollar Club of New York has aroused the enthusiasm of many. Individual gifts swelled the total and so the sum has grown. To the original offer the General Education Board added $75,000 to Midd's $25,000 and now as the college year closes the $351,000 mark is reached. This means that during the month just passed approximately $36,000 has been raised, for on March 20 there remained over $85,000 to be obtained. This rapid progress points to a success that seems assured.

The faithful endeavor and untiring work of our president and his helpers has made this drive a successful work. Attention to it has necessitated the absence of Dr. Thomas a great deal of the time the past year, but his success has been compensation for this.

The value of the fund to the College will be evidenced not by visible changes but by silent, efficient power which only such an endowment can give. There is still need for faithful work in order to complete the sum. Let us not fail in the accomplishment of this endeavor.

The Past Year

The college year for 1917-18 has been unique in many respects for it has brought many new innovations and has presented ever varying and kaleidoscopic changes.

The life of the college has been materially influenced by the war conditions for Middlebury has responded to the needs of the country with wholehearted enthusiasm. The War Service Committee, newly established this year, has proved a great success well worth copying in other colleges.

The endeavors to complete the Endowment Fund have exercised a silent but forceful influence over the college for the unusual circumstances have made it difficult to accomplish the desired results.

The Campus has not been without its share of changes. It has been established on a firm financial basis by the cancellation of a debt of long standing and by putting the subscription price on the semester bills of the students. The editor-in-chief and assistant editor-in-chief now receive credit as for an English course.

The establishment of the College Battalion and its recognition by the State was a success of much importance to Middlebury.

Many other things have been improved and we can say with pride and satisfaction that Middlebury has held her own throughout the year and as the college exercises close we can look back on the work just completed and feel that though far from what we could desire it has been, under the present trying conditions remarkably satisfactory.

My dear Professor Sanford,

Your letters are a veritable tonic. Your last one of March 16th has just reached me this morning. The mail comes in only once a day now and we seem quite out of things, really isolated. The past four weeks have been very heavy ones. Full of anxiety in one sense, and beautiful with confidence in another. You must realize that the situation is very grave, that we are passing through the most critical time of the war. The recent decision concerning the unity of commandment and the offer of the American troupes has changed the general aspect, but the battle is not yet over. Our hearts are of steel, our teeth are pressed close together and there is fight in all our sinews.

I was in Paris on Good Friday! What a horrible experience! The other day also, a bomb fell very near the place I was, and the harsh voice of la grosse Bertha as we call the monster cannon, only served to make me firmer and deeper. It is amusing to read the Boche lies about the Parisians. It is true that many women and children have left the city. That is common sense, but the others go about their business as if there were no Kanon in the world. The sister-in-law of one of our dear friends was blown to nothing in the church disaster. The Boche have added another blot to their history. I confess that I cannot understand how they can face future generations. They are condemned for eternity.

We are awakened almost every morning at seven o'clock. You would laugh to see the people in the streets. Boom! C'est Elle. Ce n'est que ça? And no stops to fear.

I have received marvelous letters from my soldiers in the thick of the battle. Their attitude is well nigh super-human.

But don't be deceived, we need America and all she can send, and we require it quickly. Every little helps. When you think that the Boche sacrifice division on division of their best soldiers, and that they are cut out like cake; while our general holds back our men so that the sacrifice may be less great. In spite of the retreat; in spite of the territory lost; in spite of the numbers thrown upon us by the Russian treason, we are sure of the victory. Today the sun shines. It is the first time for over two weeks. We are all so happy that you might mistake us for birds. I send you my affectionate greeting over the bloody seas, and look forward to seeing you in June.

H. P. Williamson de Visme.

Although very few people seem aware of the fact, the Campus has a very good list of exchanges, and papers from many of the leading colleges and high schools. These are on file in the Campus office, and are for the benefit of those who are interested. We might all very well find out what's going on in some other college. Come out and look the exchanges over.

the weight of wisdom and the value of vision.

He is entitled to a hearing by reason of his deeds. His services to his generation,—all generations—; to his land; —all lands and all people—these entitle him to a hearing.

He merits a hearing because of the greatness of his mind, the power of his intellect, the clarity of his reason, the sanity of his judgment, that quality of his thought which enabled him to pierce through the unimportant and to penetrate beneath the secondary and superficial, to strip off the inconsequential and the accidental, and to go straight and unfailingly to the real issue and to reach the real truth.

He commands a hearing by virtue of the rare worth of his life, the strength and sincerity of his character, the simplicity of his spirit; by virtue of his unselfishness and sacrificial devotion to a great cause, his loyalty to truth and justice; his sublime and unwavering belief in righteousness, and its certain victory; his simple and unfaltering faith in God and His moral government of the world.

"What would Lincoln say?" Who dare attempt an answer? Who is wise enough, unselfish enough, prophetic enough to speak in this troubled hour the clear, sane, healing, illumining words he would utter if he were but here to speak to his countrymen and to the world.

There is but one way by which such a question may be answered; namely, by the repetition of words he uttered in the great public addresses of his life time; and the application of the great and enduring wisdom of these words, interpreted in the light of his life and his spirit, to the problems of our own day. In such a way an answer to the question may be had, and such an answer will be worth the seeking and worth pondering in our hearts when it is found.

It is one of the most remarkable facts in our history that this man, born in most humble circumstances, whose youth and early manhood were spent upon the frontier,—this man who had all told scarcely more than six months of regular schooling, who walked six miles to borrow an English grammar and twenty miles to borrow his first law books,—should, when he reached the maturity of his power and the day of his opportunity, have delivered addresses ranking with those of Patrick Henry and Daniel Webster; two of them, the Gettysburg Oration and the Second Inaugural, among the greatest ever uttered in our English speech, or in any speech at any time.

During the five or six years immediately preceding his Presidency and during the slightly more than four years he was in office he delivered a se ies of the greatest addresses in our history. By the use of certain passages from six or eight of these speeches I propose to answer the question I have asked.

The address which Lincoln himself considered perhaps as able a speech as he ever made was delivered in 1854, fi st at the State Fair at Springfield and later at Peoria. It was called forth by the repeal of the Missouri Compromise in which action Stephen A. Douglas had been a leader. It was really the beginning of that great debate between Lincoln and Douglas which continued for four years, culminating in that series of joint discussions which had so much to do with the history of this nation. This address, dealing with a matter which is no longer a problem in our political life, is referred to at this time simply because it was upon this occasion that Lincoln first attained national prominence, and also first began to deal with public problems upon the high level of right and justice; which attitude of mind and method of speech, increasing as the years went on, made him more and more like the ancient Hebrew prophets in personal conviction and public utterance.

Before passing to a further consideration of some of the addresses from which lessons are drawn for our present day we must notice briefly the most dramatic episode in all Lincoln's career—the delivery of "The Lost Speech of Bloomington." It was in 1856. The convention for the organization of the Republican party had assembled in Bloomington. There were in attendance many earnest, even fanatical, men of different parties. They were discordant, envious, even hostile. There was need for some one to unify them, to fuse them by the heat of mingled passion and logic into a real unity of spirit and purpose. Aware of the momentous nature of the occasion and stirred to great passion, not alone by his hate of slavery but by threat of disunion, Lincoln, on this occasion, more than at any other, gave way to that fiery nature which ordinarily he kept so well under control. It is recorded that he spoke slowly at first then with increasing fire and fervor until he fused the discordant elements by the fire of a great passion; so that his hearers arose from their chairs and with pale faces and quivering lips pressed unconsciously toward him. The whole man seemed to be ablaze with passionate earnestness which communicated itself to his hearers so that never was an audience more electrified. The very reporters, such as Joseph Medill, later editor of the Chicago Tribune, became so absorbed that they forgot to take notes; and Lincoln himself, appealed to later to reproduce the address, was unable to set down in order either his thoughts or his language, so that only fragments of the lost speech exist to this day. Herndon, later his law partner, declared that the Bloomington speech was the one grand effort of Lincoln's life; that it was then that the inner fires broke forth; that Lincoln felt and uttered words of enduring justice; that he seemed as one standing before the throne of eternal right. A great crisis in the political life of the country had been met. Though the words of the speech are not recorded it is written upon the pages of our nation's history.

The speech delivered at the meeting of the Republican State Convention in Illinois in 1858 has its importance in marking the dividing of the ways for Lincoln and for the party for which he became the acknowledged leader. One way led to compromise and evasion, the other way led to the enunciation and acceptance of moral principles as regnant in public affairs. When Lincoln showed the advance draft of his address to certain advisers he was urged to change it and omit a certain passage. These advisers declared that to utter the words he had in mind at that time would be fatal to his political prospects, and that it would mean political suicide, and more than once did he emerge as by resurrection. In answer to his counsellors he said "The time has come when these sentiments should be uttered; and if it is decreed that I should go down because of this speech, then let me go down linked to the truth—let me die in the advocacy of what is just and right." The particular quotation from this speech from which it derives its very name is "a house divided against itself cannot stand.". Lincoln, of course, was referring to the institution of human slavery. He declared that the government could not endure permanently half slave and ha f free, but that it must become all one thing or all the other.

The application of this warning against a divided house is evident in its force and timeliness. In this great time we must guard against anything decisive, against class distinction, against whatever militates against real national unity. That man, whoever he may be, who, for interests of a party,—seeks to set North against South, or East against West, interest against interest, or class against class, is at this time a traitor to his land and to humanity. The unity of our citizenship must be maintained. There is no room for a divided loyalty. Partisanship must end at the water line. All men under the flag must be whole-heartedly committed to the great cause to which we have pledged our support.

There is also a wider application in the field of international unity. A world divided against itself cannot stand. The day has passed when one part of humanity can live under one condition and another part under another. The world must become all autocratic or all democratic. In a new sense it must become all slave or all free. This is the far reaching significance and must be the far reaching outcome ofthe war. The future must be controlled by kings or be free peoples. The world has become too small to be divided.

The next speech to which attention is called was delivered in Clinton, Ill. During a speech ear'ier in the day Douglas had charged Lincoln with being in favor of negro equality, a charge that at that time and in that part of the state he thought would work serious damage to Lincoln. But Lincoln was brave enough to meet the challenge. In his speech that evening he said: "Judge Douglas charges me with being in favor with negro equality. I am guilty of hating servitude and loving freedom. While I would not carry the equality of the races to the extent charged by my adversary I am happy to confess before you that in some things the black man is the equal of the white man—in the right to eat the bread his own hands have earned he is the equal of Judge Douglas or any living man."

Judge We'don, who was present, says when Lincoln spoke the last sentence he had lifted himself to his full height, and as he reached his hands toward the stars of that still night then and there fell from his lips one of the most sublime expressions of American statesmanship. "The effect was grand, the cheers tremendous."

It must be remembered that this was said before the Civil War when it took high courage and high statesmanship to declare the rights of men then slaves. If Lincoln were among us today he would with like passion declare the rights of the common man. That democracy in which we believe and for which we fight was a'so very dear to his heart. He stood as champion of the rights of the humblest citizen. To him a place equal to the most favored was rightfully to be given to the humblest toiler. So must we in this our day also ever recall that the men who perform the labor, bear the burdens, endure the sorrows of the world, must be reckened with by all who seek to rule. Before the law and in fundamental human rights all men are equal!

A second application of the sentiments of this address may properly be made in the discussion of the rights of peoples. Lincoln would give heartiest support to that phrase which our President has uttered and which is certain to have large place in the shaping of the peace that is to come—"the self-determination of peoples." It is perhaps not too much to say that this will be the final outcome of the present war, that the time has come when every national group bound together by ties or race and custom and language must be given freedom to work out its own destiny. The world has long enough suffered the injuries of alien rule. As in his discussion of the slavery question Lincoln declared that no man is good enough to own another man, so would he now voice the growing conviction of the world that no race is good enough to control the destinies of another race. He put the matter most clearly when he said: "When the white man governs himself and another man besides, that I call despotism."

What was in some respects the greatest public success of Lincoln's life was the Cooper Institute speech delivered in this city early in 1860. Lincoln had received an invitation from a young men's society in Plymouth Church to come to Brooklyn and deliver a lecture. For it he was to receive $200. He had been neglecting his law practice and was in need of money and this fee looked very attractive to him. At the same time he was fearful that the young men would lose money by the venture and so' accepted with some hesitation. His concern was the greater when he reached New York and found that the original plan had been abandoned and

Musical Association

The Women's Musical Association is an organization for bringing together the women of the college who are interested in singing. Last year on account of the shortened term and extra work the Association was not as active as formerly. In two recitals given in the new chapel by the musical director, the Association assisted the choir and gave a few selections.

The officers of the Association for the coming year are as follows:

President, Helen Stilphen; vice-president, Evelyn Frary; secretary and treasurer, Angeline Simpson.

that the address was to be delivered in Cooper Institute. But when the night arrived that great building was thronged with an audience which contained practically every man of prominence in the political, intellectual, and business life of the metropolis. Lincoln was escorted to the platform by Horace Greeley and David Dudley Field. William Cullen Bryant presided. Joseph Choate, who was present, declared that Lincoln came an unheralded stranger and went away wearing the laurels of a great triumph. When he spoke he was transformed, his eye kindled, his voice rang, his face shone and seemed to light up the whole assembly. For an hour and a half he held his audience in the hollow of his hand. The grand simplicities of the Bible with which he was so familiar were reflected in his discourse. It was marvellous to see how this untutored man by mere self-discipline and his own unchastened spirit had found his way to the grandeur and the strength of absolute simplicity.

He concluded with the famous sentence "Let us have faith that right makes might, and in that faith let us to the end do our duty as we understand it."

Here is the answer of the world to the insolent declaration by official Germany that might is right. In answer and defiance to that claim there has been an instinctive uprising in the heart of every man, and the banded people of the nations have thrown back the answer "It is a lie!"

There are two addresses by Lincoln which by virtue of their noble language and exalted thought, their fitness for the time when uttered, and their lasting value rise above all his other words and above everything uttered by his contemporaries. These are the Gettysburg Oration and the Second Inaugural.

The Gettysburg Oration was delivered on Nov. 19, 1863, upon the occasion of the dedication of a national cemetery on the field of the decisive battle of the war. It is said that the invitation to President Lincoln was almost an afterthought, that the original plans of the committee did not include provision for the address which has become so famous; but that finally as a matter of propriety an invitation was extended to the President, and upon his acceptance of the invitation a place for him on the program was designated. The address, so brief and yet so complete, followed a masterly oration by Edward Everett. Though occupying scarcely more than two minutes of time it contained every element of a great oration. The first sentence set forth as fully as could have been done in an hour's time the historic background. "Four score and seven years ago our fathers brought forth on this continent a new nation, conceived in liberty, and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal." The second sentence gives in few words a characterization of the great conflict. "Now we are engaged in a great civil war, testing whether that nation, or any nation so conceived and so dedicated, can long endure." The next two sentences give the local setting and occasion, "We are met on a great battlefield of that war. We have come to dedicate a portion of that field as a final resting place for those who here gave their lives that that nation might live." Then Lincoln goes on to say, "It is altogether fitting and proper that we should do this. But in a larger sense, we cannot dedicate—we cannot consecrate—we cannot hallow—this ground. The brave men, living and dead, who struggled here have consecrated it far above our poor power to add or detract." Then came one of the most sublime and daring moments in human speech. Lincoln had come to dedicate a few acres of ground as a soldiers' cemetery. He lifted his eyes to the faces of the living. Beyond them he saw yet others, a nation of men and women committed to a great cause. Beyond them he saw their children, generation after generation of men and women yet to come. It may be that he saw yet more—the nations of the earth! Speaking almost like a prophet of old he turned from the dedication of the resting place of the dead to the dedication of a people to a great cause. He said, "It is for us, the living, rather, to be dedicated here to the unfinished work which they who fought here have thus far so nobly advanced. * * * That here we highly resolve that these dead shall not have died in vain; that this nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom; and that government of the people, by the people, for the people shall not perish from the earth."

That moment, that solemn act of dedication—by one, who, in very truth stood as a prophet of the eternal God in behalf of human liberty, made it impossible that America should permanently stay out of this war.

There are three points at which application can most fittingly be made to the mighty question of our day. First, as Lincoln said more than fifty years ago so say we now, "These dead must not have died in vain.". When peace comes, as pray God it may come soon, it must not come upon any basis which shall leave out of account the rights of the millions of men who have already given their lives to be silently but effectively represented at the council table. No patched up peace that shall make their death fruitless can ever be tolerated by men in whom the spirit of Lincoln moves.

And second, of course, is the unescapable application of the words which have become so familiar to us all, "government of the people, by the people, for the people.". It is for democracy that the world is struggling. It is for the rights of people that the battles have been fought and that the armies of the nations are still embattled.

But there is a third point in this address which I confess I had not until recently noticed or felt in its full power. As Lincoln closed it was with the assertion and prophecy that popular government should not perish; but he did not say from the state of New York or from the United States of America, or from this or that nation. He did say "it shall not perish from the earth." That vision will not be fully made real until every man the world around lives under a government in which he has a voice and a part, and which is constituted and administered in his behalf.

The Second Inaugural was delivered when the end of the war was almost at hand. In it the discerning reader will find the presence of a vision of the future and wise plans for reconstruction and reconciliation. Lincoln was much of a mystic, and in these last years of his life he became more and more imbued with a sense of divine purpose and leadership. Beyond all question he became convinced also that the great task ahead was that of dealing with the South after the war had ended. In Lincoln's far-seeing plans there was no bitterness nor hatred, no evidence of an intolerance in victory; but such a magnanimity and such a brooding tenderness in his whole attitude toward the states which he declared could not "return" to the Union for they never had been out of it; such a longing for the healing of every hurt and binding up of every wound that he became almost Christ-like in his purpose and even in his death. For it may be that a wiser history can discern that in the very laying down of his life Lincoln did more for the real restoration of the Union than could have been done even had he lived. His death had in it the quality of an Atonement. His blood was the price of national Redemption. His spirit, his words, his deeds, his death all wrought together for the accomplishment of a great Reconciliation.

With malice toward none; with charity for all;—with firmness in the right, as God gives us to see the right, let us strive on to finish the work we are in; to bind up the nation's wounds, to care for him who shall have borne the battle, and for his widow, and his orphan—to do all which may achieve and cherish a just and lasting peace among ourselves, and with all nations."

How timely do all these words of the Martyred President seem. It is as though they had been uttered but yesterday. It is as though he himself once more stood before us to declare unto us the great truth for the seeing of which our own eyes had been too blinded and for the hearing of which our ears too deafened by the tumult of a terrible time. Across the years his voice sounds clear. He proclaims the unalterable truths of justice and of judgment; he lays firm the bases of a new era upon the immovable foundations of a broad humanity and an enduring liberty; he gains for us the sharing through his prophetic foreseeing of the vision of the future of a world redeemed from slavery and fear and highly dedicated by the sacrifices of heroes to the well being of all the peoples of the earth.

Such were the words of Lincoln. And such is his message to our day. He being dead yet speaketh!

"GOD'S WAR" SAYS DOCTOR THOMAS

and cities were testifying to the resurgence of the faith that faced the lions of Caesar and graved the imperishable reality of belief in God on the walls of the catacombs of Rome. The little flock of Cardinal Mercier has wrought a new apologetic, against which the gates of hell shall not prevail. It supercedes the tomes of the theologians, not because they are not true, but because they are not needed. There is no need of demonstrating life ,or mother love, or the fragrance of violets, and when men die by the million for the love of country and the honor of a bit of color wrought in silk there is no need of demonstration of the principle of the cross nor proof that the way of Golgotha is the way of life.

"Religion has not been discredited by the war, but the war has evidenced its reality. I do not recall a single book we have had from the trenches which does not speak of a new-found faith in God, stronger and more real, and with a certain high quality of devotion and enthusiasm about it as though it came by inspiration. Donald Hankey and Private Peat, Conningsby Dawson and Sergeant Empey alike testify to the sense of a strange and mighty presence which comes to men on the battlefield. They are convinced that God is in the fight and that his spirit broods over the fields of carnage, strengthening when strength has failed, leading when human leadership is vain, and receiving to himself the spirits of the fallen.

"It has been observed by many that the religion men take with them to battle is little concerned with a great many questions which have seemed important in religious circles in ordinary times. When the issue is between life and death, men are not concerned over theories of doctrine, over methods of church administration and the validity of particular forms in rites and ceremonies. All the issues which divide us into sects and parties seem beside the mark in such circumstances. Out of the depths men cry unto God: in the heat and fire of the life and death contest of many thousands the heavens open and the chariots of the Almighty wheel into line.

"Virtues are qualities which God needs for his work. They change from age to age, as God's work changes. They are positive, not negative; what men do, not what they avoid. The heroic, noble, self-sacrificing deeds of men of rough exterior in the most terrible of situations, which God's present task needs infinitely more than it needs our soft practice of the amenities, are higher virtues than they are rated in our current and complacent ethic.

"The virtues and the faith which our brothers are exercising on the field of battle ought to animate us who support and pray for them at home. We are engaged in a fearful war, against the monster nation of all time, and we have not yet begun to win. We need the help of God, and we need to throw ourselves into the war, each in the place in which we can utmost serve, with genuine religious passion.

"We have a right to call God to our side and to fight with the strength of His mighty stretched-out arm. The basis of this claim is not that we call ourselves His people, that our fathers have served and worshipped Him, that we have built churches and offered prayers, that we believe and assert with all faith that God is on our side. The Kaiser of Germany claims God for his very own and with great unction proclaims victory in His name. But the God of justice and truth is not won over by violent proclamations nor are men or emperors heard of Him for their much speaking. God fights with those who fight with Him and we have a right to believe that it is His cause we are now defending.

"This is the conflict of ideals which is being waged in the fields of France. It is no mere strife among political methods, as some of our popular phrases might lead us to think. We have no great care over mere forms of government. We are not greatly stirred as to whether one nation or another of like qualities has precedence in the trade of the world. But we do not have care that a nation which aspires to a dominating position in the world, and which essays to dominate by might alone, shall be throttled in its purpose. We wrestle not against particular flesh and blood, but against principalities and powers, against spiritual wickedness in high places—against the demons of the spoliation of the weak, the plunder of the poor, the crushing of the helpless for the sake of their frugal savings and the fruit of their painful toil—against all the crimes of the strong against the weak, which civilization and law and religion have labored for centuries to banish and destroy.

"When a soldier under our flag fixes this issue clear, when he sees that he is fighting to discredit in the only way that it can be discredited the hellish doctrine that a strong nation is justified in the wholesale destruction of weaker peoples, that soldier may well say,—

> 'Blessed be the Lord my rock
> Who teacheth my hands to war
> And my fingers to fight.'

I contend further that we should support this war as a holy crusade because of the consequences which a German victory would have upon the direction of human endeavor and ambition. If Germany wins, and intentioned war is thereby justified as a prudent and profitable method for the advancement of a State, it will mean that the cultivation of military powers will be established as the most important and profitable duty of any people. Progress will be measured by the extent and perfection of munition works and by the degree of national skill in military preparation. The highest patriotic use of science and invention will be found in the construction of engines of destruction and the most effective employment of instruments to maim or kill. Political science will devote itself to the organization of a people for war and diplomacy will school itself primarily and chiefly how to promote jealousy and rivalism by which other nations may weaken themselves and one's own people be placed in position to win the advantage in any everthrow.

"We have assumed as the object of human endeavor among all peoples the general betterment of the world, the increase of human happiness, the security of all men everywhere in the rights of life and liberty. We have looked upon the world as a family of nations, a brotherhood of peoples, with men striving everywhere fr the increase of human good, for the advance of knowledge, the spread of virtue and pure religion, and the suppression of ignorance and disease and injustice and oppression and evil of every sort. We have dreamed of a parliament of man, a federation of the world, in which all should strive together for the uplift of humanity and the coming of the kingdom of God.

"The ambition which has seized the throne in Germany would restrict all striving for good to endeavor to promote the brute strength of a nation. We are holding ideals which extend beyond the strengthening of our own nation for military purposes. We are fighting to make the world something other than a permanent shambles —to make it the home of the children of God seeking to establish his will. Every poem written since blind Homer sang, every inspiration of every artist and seer, that enshrines any personal sentiment, can find sympathetic appeal only when the lustful greed of selfish power to which Germany has pledged allegiance meets the overthrow it deserves.

In such a fight may God help us and teach every soldier to hold steady and shoot straight. May God give our men nerves of steel and grit to endure the hell that is before them. It is God's war and may God help them!

It makes a difference for what men fight and the motives that inspire them. No man has more need of a clear conscience than a soldier, because no test in human life is so severe. The whole American nation should stand back of the men who fight for us, in the clear and firm conviction that it is the holy right which sends them across the seas for us. It is a high privilege to fight for God with all one's strength when the issue is plain. The present issue is clear as the sunlight. Returning soldiers tell of strange visions over yonder—of Joan of Arc again on her pale charger riding before the poilus in resistless attack—of figures of the Christ, seen undoubtedly by thousands of men at a time, with drawn sword toward the hostile ranks and hand of protection and benediction over those who face them. I do not doubt in the tumult of the battle they have seen such things—least of all do I doubt the reality for which the visions stand. For how can the righteous God, how can the Christ who loved the sons of men and who blessed the little children, stand otherwise than at the side of those who give their life, not merely that their own nation may live, but that the weak and helpless in every nation may dwell secure against those who would destroy them? In our own civil war a noble spirit testified,—

"I have seen Him in the watch fires of a hundred circling camps,
a hundred circling camps,
They have builded Him an altar
by the evening dews and damps,
I can read his righteous sentence
by the dim and flaring lamps.
Our God is marching on."

SECOND WAR-TIME COMMENCEMENT

mer bounced one off Crippen's glove, filling the bases. Hebard missed Parker's fly, and two men tallied. Aines flied out to Brown. Cooley doubled scoring Elmer and Parker. Cooley was thrown out at the plate by Preston on Heath's hit. When Brouwer singled to left, Heath died at the plate. For Co. A, Brown walked. S. Ross was thrown out. Moran doubled to right, scoring Brown. Crippen lined to Cooley. Myrick closed the session by fanning.

Mercer began the second by singling. Bower got a two-bagger. Mead tripled scoring both runners. Mead scored on an infield tap.

Co. A tallied again in the third on clean hitting and added another in the fourth. They brought the score to 8-5 by negotiating another in the fifth. Mercer started the seventh with a slashing double, and then Bower tripled. While Moran was retiring Mead, Bower scored.

In the ninth Co. A staged a determined rally. With two down, Preston walked, Brown doubled. Ross hit one through Bower's legs, scoring two runs. Ross pilfered the ultimate hassock. Moran stole second and third. Franklyn punctured the air in three fruitless attempts to connect with Elmer's benders.

The score:

	1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9	R	H	E
Co. B	4	3	0	0	0	0	2	0	0	—9	12	2
Co. A	1	0	1	1	2	0	0	0	3	—8	9	3

Elmer and Brouwer; Crippen, Myrick and S. Ross.

MIDD 75, R. S. C. 15

Middlebury College handed out the worst defeat in track to the Reserve Corps that she has ever administered in her history. The team from Burlington was completely outclassed in every event except in the 440-yard dash in which Greene came through and won by several feet from Brouwer in the fast time of 56 1-5 seconds. Brown (M) was a close third. The final score was, Middlebury 75, Reserve Corps 15. The track was in fairly good condition but no records were broken due to the fact that the men had only been training for ten days and that a cold north wind blew across the field and greatly hampered the distance men.

The meet started at 3:15 and was completed at 5:30 including three wrestling bouts.

Jones was the high point winner of the meet, gathering three firsts for Middlebury in the 1 mile and 2 mile runs and in the 880-dash. He easily outclassed the fields in these events and won his races by yards. In the 2-mile he lapped one of his opponents.

'Brainy' Bower came through in the 100-yard and 220-yard dashes in fine style with Darby of Middlebury taking second in each event and with Middlebury making a clean sweep in the 220 when Brown captured third.

Middlebury's strength was everywhere as is shown by the fact that she secured nine firsts, eight seconds and six thirds and made a clean sweep of all places in the high jump, 1-mile and the 220-yard dash.

It was decided to send Brewster '18 and Jones '19 to the N. E. Intercollegiate meet to be held in Boston on May 18.

About 400 spectators were present at the meet.

Order of events, summaries, officials, etc.:

Total, Middlebury 75, Reserve Corps 15.

Starter and referee, Coach Murch.

Judges and timers, Profs. Harrington and Swett.

Scorer, U. Parker '18.

CLASS DAY

The annual Class Day exercises were held Saturday morning May 4, on the College campus. The exercises opened with the entrance march of the seniors from the library to the temporary stage, and the seniors, led by Manuel Bolivar and Mildred Cady of the junior class, passed between ropes of evergreen held by the girls of the college. The president's address was given by Forrest G. Myrick, who also read a letter from Irving Eastman, one of the former members of the class who is now in the U. S. Navy. President Myrick introduced the class historian, Ruth Louise Norris, who told in a most interesting and amusing way the story of the class of 1918. The oration was given by Richard Buffum, who told the meaning of college from the standpoint of the graduating class, and who also defined real success as opposed to the general opinion held by people in College. The class poet was Dorothy H. Brown, and very earnestly and effectively she told how much Alma Mater means to her children. The prophecy was given by Elsie L. Foote and Marion S. Webb, and many strange and wonderful events were foretold for their classmates. The class essay, written by Margaret Chatfield, pictured vividly the early struggles of Middlebury College, then told of our work in the world today, of what we have done and what we have still to do. The class will was given by Henry Crippen, who disposed of the possessions of the class of '18 in most fitting fashion. The class gift, a service flag with 205 stars and one gold star was presented to the college by Elsie Monteith, vice-president of the class.

The awarding of honors by President Thomas followed.

The Horace prizes were announced as follows: First prize to Pauline Locklin; Second prize, Corinne M. Weber; Third prize, Mary L. Smith. A special first prize was awarded to Mary Bliss.

President Thomas also announced the Kellog Latin-English Prize, to be awarded anually for the best and second best papers furnished by the class in Horace, or the translation of an ode, with an essay upon it. The George H. Catlin gift of a $1,000 Liberty Bond, the income of which is to be given annually to that man in the senior class who is most excellent in the classical course was announced, and Henry Chapman was awarded the prize for this year. Following the awarding of honors, the ivy was planted by President Myrick, and the ivy oration delivered by Charles J. Lyon. The class day exercises ended with the time honored smoking of the peace pipes, and singing of Middlebury songs.

TRACK CHAMPIONSHIP FALLS TO FRESHMEN

In an interesting track-meet held on Porter Field on Saturday afternoon, April 27, the Junior class upset the 'dope' by easily outscoring the Freshman team which was the favorite. The score was as follows: Juniors 40, Freshmen 26½, Sophomores 12½, Seniors 11.

The weather was ideal for a meet and though the track was not very fast the times of several events were very good.

Jones '19 was the star of the meet. He secured 15 points for his class by winning the ½ mile, the 1 mile and the 2 mile races, and in the last he lapped the entire field. The time of these races was not fast due to the lack of competition. Bower also of '19 proved himself the best in the sprints by taking the 100 and 220-yard dashes. Hebard '19 won eight points by placing first in the broad jump and securing a second to Thomas '20 in the high jump. As was expected Brewster '18 took the discus throw with a heave of 105'3" which was over 23 feet better than his nearest competitor. Farnham '20 furnished the surprise of the afternoon when he defeated Brouwer '21 by 2 yards in the 440-yard dash which everyone had practically conceded to the latter. Miske proved his endurance by placing second in both the mile and the 2-mile runs and with coaching he will make a good running mate for Jones in these events. Captain Brown was high point scorer for the freshmen with 6½ points, Keppler won the shot by ½ an inch from Brewster with a put of 31'7½". Richardson '21 took third in the 440 and was second to Jones in the 880.

UNION AND ATHLETIC ASSOCIATION ELECTIONS

The last regular meetings of the college Union and Athletic Association were held on Wednesday evening, April 24 in Hepburn social hall.

The main business of both meetings was the election of officers. The following were elected for the coming college year: Union—President, Watson '19, Vice-President, Jones '19, Secretary, S. Ross '20, Treasurer, Pitkin '19, Chairman of Finance Committee, Woodward '20 and Chairman of Social Committee, Parker '20. Reports of several committees were given and the Union voted to buy ten pictures of different athletic teams to be placed in the Union Rooms.

The meeting was the best which has been held in several years and every office was keenly contested. Seventy men attended.

President's Myrick's plea on retiring was that the whole student body of the men's college should back President Watson during the next year.

The Athletic Association meeting was called to order by President Parker '18. The following officers for 1918-19 were elected: Jones '19, President; Kinne '20, Vice-President and Hinchey '20, Secretary. These elections were also very close, several ballots being necessary for a choice.

ATHLETIC COUNCIL MEETING APRIL 23

The last meeting of the Athletic Council for this college year was held on April 23 in the old Chapel. Chairman Swett presided.

The following business was transacted: voted to give $700 for the 1918-19 football season, voted to send a team to represent Middlebury College at the New England Intercollegiate track meet to be held at Boston on May 18. The following assistant managers were elected: Miesse '20 track, Law '20 baseball and Grant '20 basketball. It was also voted that in case the men in the service return they shall assume their positions as managers or as assistant managers, if they had been elected before leaving college.
